Dear {{RecipientGreeting}},

Sharing pertinent health information on your camper's forms, both physical and emotional, is essential. Having necessary information on file helps to keep everyone safe. Sending a camper to camp with "family secrets" serve no one and can cause added stress and hardship. We will teach and expect our campers to be open and honest at camp. We expect camp parents to be open and honest when completing annual camp forms.

As you complete your forms, we understand that it may be appropriate to have additional conversations or share additional context about new or ongoing personal topics before camp begins. As you complete your camp forms, please reach out early so we can partner together and makes plans that will help set your camper up for success.

How to set your camper up for success now for...

Sleeping in a new space... Eating new foods...Going to the bathroom in a new space..

As campers imagine themselves going North Star, worries or uncertainties may grow when they wonder if and how they will meet their daily needs. To help new campers picture what it's like to live at camp and set them up for success, show them what's it's like!

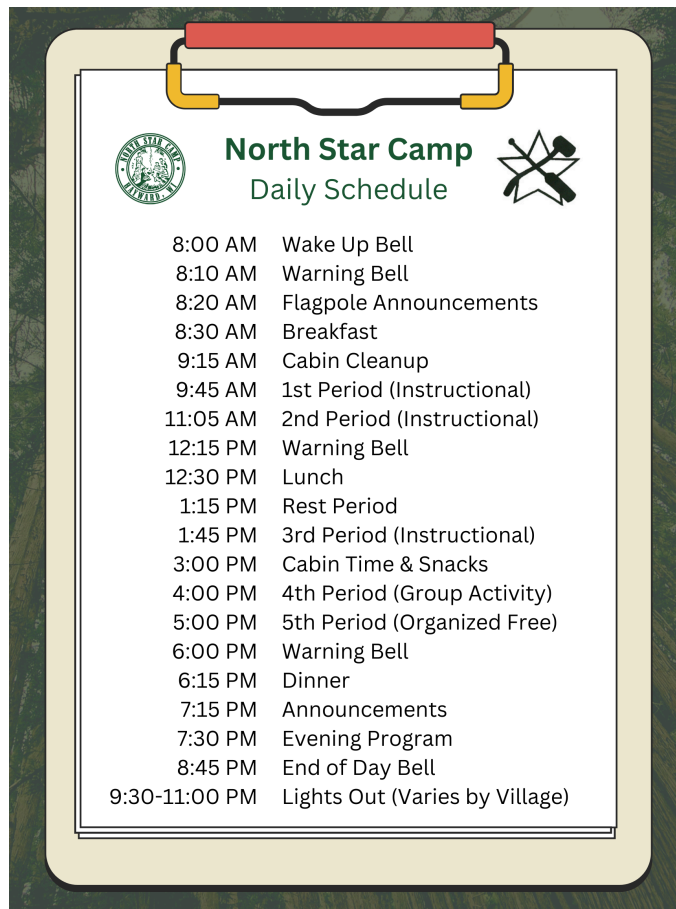

We have videos and a guide geared toward new campers and that answers many of their questions as well as a daily schedule. Watch and read through it all together and have them write down all their questions about what they are still unsure or wondering about.

They can share their questions with camp directors, who are always happy to connect. Additionally, in June, first time campers will get matched with a camp "Big Brother." Big Brothers will reach out and be there to answer all of their questions before camp begins as well.
